Satoru Tezuka is a Professor of the School of Computer Science, Tokyo University of Technology, Ph.D.

He graduated from the department of Technology, Keio University in 1984, and joined Hitachi Ltd. He is a Professor of the School of Computer Science, Tokyo University of Technology since 2009.

He received the 2004 IPSJ Best Paper Award, the 2008 IPSJ Best Paper Award, the IEEE-IIHMSP2006 Best Paper Award, and the 2013 Information Security Cultural Award.

His books include "Enterprise Codes make Japan Strong: Another Type of Individual Number, the "Corporate Number（Nikkei BP）" and "Basic Information Security（Kyoritsu Shuppan）". He is a head director of the Information Network Law Association, an executive director of the Japan Society of Security Management and the director of the Institute of Digital Forensics. He is a member of various government related organizations including the Specific Individual Information Protection Committee, the Cybersecurity Strategy Headquarters Information Security Policy Meeting Critical Infrastructure Advisory Committee, the IT Strategy Headquarters Electronic Administration Task Force, the Related Information Infrastructure Technology Working Group, the Basic Resident Register Network Research Committee and CRYPTREC. He is also a chairperson of the Electronic Signature Law Working Group.